

Noah

Daniel Curry,
Animal Care Specialist

NOAH WAS AND STILL IS an amazing animal that Wolf Haven is privileged to give a home to when he was in need. Originally, Wolf Haven had nothing to do with Noah being rescued. You see Noah's family was rescued from a fur breeder in Oklahoma. Noah's parents were pulled from this nightmare of a life just before they were to be slaughtered. Noah's father and mother were then housed at the rescuer's home where they accidentally tied (mated) through a fence, even though this was no accident from their point of view. Once Noah was born, his new human family took over and raised him. Noah sure seemed to love his new life as a domestic wolf. The words domestic and wolf generally don't belong together, and in most cases, these "pets" don't last long or do well at all. It was decided for Noah's best interest that he would be given a home at Wolf Haven International, where he could live out the remainder of his life in peace and comfort with another wolf.

Noah was an interesting rescue case, because from his point of view we were not rescuing him. We were taking him from his Taco Bell trips and his couch that he could lie and chew on at the same time. It's not like he wanted to leave this life, so it wasn't a great relief to arrive somewhere else. It took Noah a while to settle into the new people and routines.

everything a little bit more tolerable. He was able to have two mates during his time here. Akima was his first girl and Sequra was his last girl. I

Mexican wolf status review

THE FWS HAS DETERMINED that the Mexican gray wolf (Canis lupus baileyi) may warrant reclassification as an endangered subspecies under the ESA. They are currently conducting a status review as part of their comprehensive National strategy for the gray wolf in the US. The Mexican gray wolf's entire historic range, which runs from Utah and western Colorado south into southern Mexico, will be evaluated in the range-wide status review process. The FWS is soliciting public comment and new information on the Mexican gray wolf during the status review.

only was privileged to see Noah with Sequra, but what a sight. They were best friends.

Noah always possessed strength in solitude and didn't really seem to need anyone. But Sequra has a talent of wiggling into your heart and making a nest. I would often find Noah showering her with affection when no one was around, or so he thought. They became very good friends that loved one another immensely.

It was our honor to give Noah a home for the remainder of his life. He didn't have to go through the greed filled fur farming industry that would have been his end. Instead he was able to come here and love deeply, eat heartily, run hard, and lounge in peace. He did form friendships with a few of the people here at Wolf Haven, and those few are better off now for knowing him. What a stalwart man you are Noah. Just remember, being taken from this home doesn't mean something better isn't just right around the corner. See you again, Brother.
